Contra Aid 'contrary' to democracy Nicaraguan embassy official says

By Bill Slocum
Daily Campus Staff

American aid to Contra rebels in Nicaragua is "contrary to the cause of democracy and peace," a Nicaraguan diplomat said last night here.

Speaking with only a slight accent, Rosa Tummerman, director of cultural affairs at the Nicaraguan embassy in Washington, D.C., and wife of the Nicaraguan ambassador there, told of Nicaragua's early years of independence, and of American involvement in the region, which she said was "motivated by U.S. interest in a quick route between the eastern and western United States." Nicaragua, a narrow strip of land between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans with a wide river and large, central lake, was an early candidate for a transcontinental canal, which was eventually built in neighboring Panama.

In 1855, Tummerman said, Louisianian William Walker led a military force to take over the nation. Recognized by the United States in 1856, Walker established the first of several "puppet regimes" backed by the American government, Tummerman said.

Saying that "control of Nicaragua was of major geopolitical importance to the United States", Tummerman pointed out that U.S. Marines invaded the country three times between 1909 and 1928, establishing Anastasio Somoza as head of the National Guard.

Students vote to add 2 study days, elect members

By Paul Parker
Daily Campus Staff

Students approved a two-day study period before finals, a new USG constitution and sent all but one incumbent back to the Student Assembly in a low voter turnout in yesterday's campus-wide elections.

By more than five to one, voters approved the proposal for the extra reading days at the end of each semester and OK'd a new Undergraduate Student Government constitution six to one. The reading day proposal would take effect only if approved by the University Senate. The constitution now goes to the Board of Trustees for its consideration.

The vote on the reading days proposal was 1,541-304 — an 83 percent to 17 percent victory. The constitution passed 1,344-224 — 86 percent to 14 percent.

In the campus-wide at-large race, three incumbents and two new candidates won seats on the Student Assembly. Ross Garber, USG comptroller, led all candidates with 465 votes. Kraig St. Pierre was the only other to come close, with 363 votes.

Kathleen Brett, with 181 votes; William Robert Connelly, 176 votes, and Chris B. VanDoren, 151 votes, also won at-large seats.

Third Marine arrested in espionage scandal

By Norman Black
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—A third Marine who worked as a security guard in Moscow and Leningrad and in the U.S. Embassy in Rome has been arrested on suspicion of espionage, causing American officials to broaden their investigations into security breaches in American diplomatic missions.

Sgt. John Joseph Weirick, 26, of Eureka, Calif., was arrested Tuesday night and held in the brig at Camp Pendleton, Calif., said Robert Sims, chief Defense Department spokesman. He is suspected of espionage while working as a security guard at the American consulate in Leningrad in 1981 and 1982, Sims said.

When it rains outside, it pours inside for students on 6th floor Eddy Hall

By Michael Coon
Daily Campus Staff

Students on the sixth floor of coed Eddy Hall have been using garbage cans, towels, pots and pans to collect rain water seeping through the walls and ceiling, according to senior nursing student Cheryl Yazluk, a resident of the floor.

Yazluk said that although the problem was reported to the university last year by former residents of the floor, the leaks still have not been repaired and have caused serious disruption in life on the floor.

During the storm last week more than four gallons of water poured out of four leaks on her ceiling, Yazluk said.

According to David Turnquist, director of engineering for the Office of Facilities, the leaks have been temporarily repaired by the contractor who originally installed the roof. Turnquist said that facilities will "look at other buildings to see if this is a problematic situation or unique to this dorm [Eddy Hall]."

Yazluk said that after reporting the leaks to her resident assistant she became frustrated with the lack of progress on the problem so she contacted her state representative, Richard Foley, Republican of Oxford. Foley wrote to President John Casteen in a letter dated January 13 about the problem, Yazluk said. Casteen could not be reached for comment last night. Turnquist said that some pressure to repair the leaks came from the letter to Casteen but said that his office became

State official tells of plan to build prison near here

By Derek Gray
Daily Campus Staff

The state may build an 800-bed, medium-security prison near Mansfield Training School and imprison drunken driving offenders in vacated school buildings, officials told representatives from Mansfield and UConn yesterday.

Both projects are possible, said William Carbone, undersecretary of the state's Office of Policy and Management.

"They're not mutually exclusive," Carbone said. "There could be both."

Carbone; Mayor Jane Ann Bobbitt; Town Manager Martin Berliner; state Rep. Jonathan Pelto, Democrat of Mansfield, and Willie Hagan, UConn director of governmental relations, discussed details of the plan yesterday in Hartford.

A public hearing is tentatively scheduled for April 23 in Mansfield and will include presentations by Carbone and the Department of Corrections officials, Bobbitt said.

The state is considering building the prison — which would include 500 beds for medium-security prisoners and a 300-bed classification center — on 100 to 150 acres of state-owned land north of Route 44A, about five miles northwest of here, Carbone said.

The state is also considering other state-owned and privately-

Committee rejects death penalty law

HARTFORD (AP)—A legislative committee voted Wednesday to abolish the death penalty in Connecticut and replace it with life in prison without the possibility of parole.

The Judiciary Committee's 16-11 vote followed spirited debate about the morality of state-sanctioned killing and the right of society to demand retribution for especially heinous crimes.

If the measure wins final passage and is signed into law, Connecticut would become the first state in the nation to abolish the death penalty since it was ruled constitutional in 1976. The bill now goes to the House.

Gov. William A. O'Neill reiterated his support for the death penalty earlier in the week but stopped short of saying he would veto a bill abolishing it.

"I firmly believe that to act out in the same manner as an offender has debases us and brutalizes us and we become no better than them," Rep. Richard D. Tulisano, D-Rocky Hill, co-chairman of the Judiciary Committee, sponsor of the bill.

Tulisano and others also argued that the judicial system is too imperfect to have the power to end a person's life.

"When you're dealing with the ultimate punishment, there is no coming back," Tulisano said.

Rep. Martin M. Looney, D-New Haven, said: "We should have sufficient humility in our system to be aware of its flaws."

Looney, however, said he would seek to amend the bill once it gets to the House to allow the death penalty for one category of crime — a capital felony committed by someone who is already serving a life-without-parole sentence for an earlier capital felony conviction.

Webster forgot memo implicating North

WASHINGTON (AP)—A Justice Department official expressed suspicions as early as last October — nearly a month before public disclosure of the Iran-Contra affair — that Lt. Col. Oliver North eventually could come under criminal investigation, FBI Director William Webster told Congress on Wednesday.

Webster acknowledged reading an Oct. 30 FBI memo which outlined speculation by the Justice Department official concerning the activities of North, who was later fired from his post as a National Security Council aide at the White House.

But Webster said he had forgotten about the memo by Nov. 21, when Attorney General Edwin Meese III, declining Webster's offer of FBI help, undertook an informal inquiry into secret U.S. arms sales to Iran.

By the time the Meese probe turned into a formal criminal investigation, on Nov. 26, documents crucial to the inquiry already had been destroyed or altered, according to government investigators.

Webster made his comments at a Senate Intelligence Committee hearing on his nomination to be head of the CIA. The committee's chairman, Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., scheduled a second day of hearings for Thursday, but he and vice chairman William Cohen, R-Maine, said they had seen nothing so far that would endanger Webster's confirmation.

During Wednesday's testimony, Webster pledged to keep Congress informed of CIA covert activities. He said holding back information on such matters as the Iran arms deal — as the Reagan administration did — violates the spirit of a law on the subject, and he said he would resign rather than go along with such a situation as CIA director.

70 Soviet soldiers dead in Afghan avalanche

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP)—Up to 70 Soviet soldiers were killed when an avalanche buried a military base near a mountain highway in northern Afghanistan, sources said Wednesday.

Western diplomatic sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, also said reports from Afghanistan pointed to a major upsurge in fighting between Moslem guerrillas and Soviet and government forces with the coming of spring.

The Western sources said the avalanche struck during the first week of April, hitting a Soviet military base guarding the strategic Salang highway north of the capital of Kabul. The garrison of the post guarding the road linking Kabul and the Soviet border was wiped out.

Afghan guerrilla officials based in Pakistan said they could not confirm the report. Jamiat-i-Islami, the guerrilla group most active along the Salang highway, said it had heard nothing about the reported avalanche.

Officials of the Afghan Information Center, which reports on Afghanistan from the Pakistani border city of Peshawar, also said they had not received any reports on the incident, but added that at the end of the winter there are frequent avalanches in the mountains through which the highway passes.

Numerous reports from Afghanistan pointed to a major upswing in fighting with the end of winter, the Western sources said. Guerrilla units are expected to launch a major offensive against Kabul and appear to be moving reinforcements toward the capital, they said.

Heavy fighting broke out north of Kabul last weekend with government artillery and aircraft attacking guerrilla units, the sources said.

NEW HAVEN (AP)—The city will go to court on Friday in an effort to overturn the State Board of Labor Relation's order temporarily forbidding drug testing of New Haven police officers.

The board issued the order after New Haven Police Union Local 530 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees filed a complaint claiming a new drug-testing policy violated the union contract.

HARTFORD (AP)—Connecticut River waters began receding Wednesday in Hartford and were expected to reach their highest level in Middletown on Thursday, the state's civil preparedness director said.

"After late tonight, the road is downhill as we can start enjoying spring weather," Director Frank Mancuso said.

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP)—Billions of gallons of cooling water contaminated with thousands of punds of radioactive materials were dumped into the soil in the first 25 years of operation of the Hanford nuclear reservation, say federal documents released today.

The amount of the daily dumping caused scientists to revise their estimate of the time it would take contaminated groundwater to reach the Columbia River from 1,000 years to only one year, the documents indicate.

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congressional investigators announced agreement with the White House on Wednesday on a plan giving them limited access to President Reagan's handwritten notes going back to 1984 dealing with the Iran-Contra controversy.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP)—A strong earthquake rocked central Nicaragua for about 35 seconds on Wednesday, but authorities said they had no immediate reports of major damage or casualties.

The government's seismological institute said it had no immediate reading on the quake, but the state radio, the Voice of Nicaragua, described it "as quite big."

GRENOBLE, France (AP)—This Alpine city, encouraged by the worldwide snob appeal of French water, plans to bottle its own tap water and sell it to American consumers.

"Our objective is to fill 100 million bottles per year," said Christiane d'Ornano, a deputy mayor overseeing studies on the project.

...Nicaraguan seeks peace with America

"The Nicaraguan resistance to American occupation gave birth to the guiding principles of the Nicaraguan Revolution," Tummerman said. Led by General Augusto Sandino, the rebels "waged war from the mountains against the Marines," she said, until the Marine occupation ended in 1933. Sandino was assassinated by Somoza the next year, clearing the way for his family to rule Nicaragua for almost 50 years.

Formed in 1961, the Sandinistas were "organized for the ideals of the oppressed," Tummerman said. The Sandinistas wrested control of Nicaragua from Somoza's son in 1979, and, with the beginning of the Reagan administration in 1981, U.S. funding to Nicaraguan forces opposed to the Sandinista government, called "Contras", began.

U.S. reasons for opposing the Sandinista government are "a series of false accusations used to justify a war of aggression. The U.S. has always sought to exercise control over Nicaragua," she said.

Arguing against the idea that the "Sandinista Revolution is the result of an East-West confrontation," Tummerman said that "our confrontation is older" than the October Revolution of 1917, which brought a Communist regime in Russia.

Tummerman also brought up the accusation that Nicaragua is totalitarian, countering it by saying that the last national elections, in 1984, had seven political parties running, of which the Sandinistas were just one. "The only totalitarian model we know is the one imposed on us by the U.S.," she said. "Somoza's rule was a long nightmare of horror, poverty, death, and loss of sovereignty for Nicaragua."

Saying that Nicaragua has "kept its promises and its commitment to our people," Tummerman said the revolution has brought "land for the peasants, literacy, direct democracy, and an end to torture." As an example, she said "two drafts of the country's constitution were discussed in more then 70 town meetings."

"Nicaragua doesn't have a military philosophy," Tummerman said, "but we are forced to hand out weapons because of our legitimate right to defend ourselves." Pointing to recent U.S. military buildups in Honduras, she said that these actions "are designed to intimidate Nicaragua." "If this continues to escalate, we know from Vietnam that direct confrontation will take place."

Tummerman denied that acts of repression are committed against the indigenous population of the region, especially the Meskito Indians. "We made some mistakes in the past," she said. "We committed some human rights abuses between 1981-1984." She said that the Indians were living in a major battle zone, and attempts to move them out met with resistance. "Our new Constitution recognizes the rights of the Indians to self-determinization. We are sending them back to their homeland and giving them arms to fight the Contras."

Tummerman also denied that the Catholic Church, the most widespread religion in the area, is being repressed by the Sandinistas. "The Catholic Church has been growing in the last seven years," she said. "There were 293 priests before the trials [of Somoza officials, an early action that put the Sandinistas firmly in control] as opposed to around 430 now."

"Christians have been involved in the shaping of changes in Nicaragua," Tummerman said. "Since 1979, the Christian population has played a crucial role in the Revolution. The conception of a Church committed to the cause of the poor has become a concrete reality." While saying that the goals of the Sandinistas and the Catholic Church are the same, she did acknowledge "political differences" between the two. "They don't trust us," she said. "They share the destructive policies of the United States."

Tummerman said that the United States may oppose the Sandinistas because they are a "dangerous example." "Nicaragua is a Latin American solution to poverty," she said.

owned sites for the prison, including a privately-owned site in Windsor. The state plans the prison for 1992. The Mansfield site is "not final," Carbone said.

The other project calls for state use of four buildings north of Route 44A on the campus of the institution for the mentally retarded. The buildings will be vacated as the training school releases retarded clients into group homes in the community under a court order.

Deardon and Campbell halls will be vacated by July and may be used to house violators of driving while intoxicated laws. The buildings will be rated within 90 days, Carbone said.

Bennett and Lions halls will be vacated by July, 1989, and all four buildings may then be upgraded and merged into a complex for more serious offenders. No maximum-security prisoners will be kept in the complex, he said.

Bennett and Lions halls each hold about 60 people. Campbell Hall once held about 120 clients, but now holds about 47, a spokesman at the training school said, and Deardon Hall has 76 rooms and 14 apartments.

Bobbitt said, "I do not feel that they have convinced me that Mansfield is the place."

Bobbitt again said that a prison is "not compatible" in the same area with the training school, university and proposed research park.

Mansfield already has a large amount of state land which cannot be taxed by the town, Bobbitt said.

"It shows that a tiny country can stand up and say to the United States 'We don't want you to boss us around. We have dignity.' We are dangerous because we set an example of dignity, prosperity, and national sovereignty to the world."

While often making angry stances against perceived American aggression, Tummerman also struck a warmer note. "Our constitution is closer to yours than to the Soviet Union," she said. "We are natural partners in trade. We want not only peaceful and normal relations with the U.S., but friendly relations as well. This can and must be worked out through dialogue and negotiation. Queremos la paz. We want peace."

involved in the problem before the letter was received on January 29.

Yazluk said that "the leak was reported last year but the university won't do anything unless you go higher up. The only way [to correct the problem] is to threaten them with some kind of action." Because the university was aware of the problem last year, Yazluk said, "during the summer the university should repair dorms instead of putting rocks all around campus."

Turnquist said that the leaks are caused by improperly installed roofing material and cited "workmanship problems" as the reason the roof leaks. Turnquist said that the contractor, Hartford Roofing, could not be reached to repair the problem until recently, contributing to the delay in repairing the leaks. He also said that poor communication between the engineering, construction and repair departments of the Office of Facilities added to the delay.

Edward Staveski, structural systems supervisor for facilities, said that he had "no record of any complaint and no record of any work order" issued to repair the leak. Turnquist, however, said that it was a work order that prompted him and construction manager Daniel Costello to assess the damage to the roof on January 22 and again with a representative of the J.P. Stevens company, manufacturer of the roofing material, on Feburary 6.

After contacting Hartford Roofing in early March, Turnquist said that the contractor failed to pay for the warranty covering the roofing material so no work could be done on it until early this week when a temporary repair was made. Turnquist did not indicate when or if permanent repairs will be made.

...prison may be built nearby

President John Casteen said Monday, "A genuine prison would be a serious problem for us [UConn]. But if it was just DWI facilities, that might be another matter."

"We're willing to listen to all the complaints," Carbone said.

"I think we'll have more to say after the public hearing," he said.

"They hear," Bobbitt said, "they understand. But of course the pressure for them to produce beds is quite real."

There are now about 6,590 prisoners in the state system, which has a capacity of 6,675. If inmate populations exceed capacities at prisons and jails, state law requires prisoners to be released.

The average number of drunken driving offenders jailed a day increased from 34 in 1984 to 150 in 1986, said Carbone, who is also chairman of the state's prison overcrowding commission.

The state plans to use the National Guard's Camp Hartell in Windsor Locks for 100 prison beds, Eddy Hall at Connecticut Valley Hospital in Middletown for 75 beds and to convert part of the lock-up at Superior Court in Hartford for 100 beds. The state also plans a 400-bed prison in the Greater Waterbury area by 1991.

Hagan said in a statement he went to the discussion because UConn was invited and because Mansfield officials knew the university wants to house administrative offices in the training school's vacated buildings.

Yale and Southern Connecticut State universities are within one mile of a lock-up — the Whalley Avenue Jail in New Haven.

"I never noticed it," David Peterson, dean of student activities at the state university, said. "I just never thought of it as a problem."

Of the 12 area and commuter races, nine were uncontested. The three contested races were Hilltop, South and Towers.

In Hilltop, which had an election high 30 percent turnout, Frederick Kelly beat Kristine Petonito 118-94.

In South, the only race where an incumbent was defeated, Sandy J. Schiller and Cheryl J. Varrone beat incumbent Stephen E. Podeszwa, Robert B. Gordon and Kevin McCarthy. The votes were, respectively, 86 and 69 for the winners and 63, 41 and 15 for the losers.

In Towers, Rachel Heerema and Colleen Foley beat Jennifer Hooper and Todd Sebastian. Heerema had 75, Foley 45, Hooper 38 and Sebastian 33.

Herbst, with 127, had the most votes for an unsuccessful candidate while Corinne Marie Sandberg had the least votes for successful candidates with five. She was elected a commuter representative in an uncontested election.

INSIGHT INTO EYESIGHT
Dr. Leo Santucci
OPTOMETRIST
ADAPTING TO CHANGE
Most people have no trouble adapting to a new lens prescription or even to wearing eyeglasses for the first time. Occasionally, however, people will complain of discomfort when changing or starting in with new glasses.
The most common reason for this is too much change at one time. This usually occurs when you have delayed your examination for a few years. During that time your eyes may have changed a good deal, but so gradually that you were scarcely aware of it. Trying to accommodate to three or four years worth of change all at once can be confusing and uncomfortable. This is why yearly or biannual checkups are so strongly recommended.
Switching from one type of lens to another may also be a cause of discomfort. People introduced to bifocals for the first time often have to go through a period of adjustment. It is also important not to make too dramatic a change in the shape of the lens or the style of the frame.

Crew team fighting currents to gain varsity status

By Tim Fatsi
Campus Correspondent

The typical day for a member of the UConn Crew team begins at about five o'clock in the morning.

Members of the crew must get out to Coventry Lake by 6:00 a.m. to practice. This is the only time that the coach is available to see his team in action.

The coach, Ken Donnelly, is a volunteer coach who has a full-time job throughout the day. UConn Crew, for the time being, is not an intercollegiate sport but merely a club.

Crew is the sport of racing long narrow boats (called shells) propelled by oars. A shell for a crew of eight people may be up to 60 feet long, but it is no more than two feet wide. The oarsman braces his legs and sits in a sliding seat so that he can push himself with his legs on each stroke.

Gilda Accibal, the secretary of the crew team, said there is a lot of interest in crew here, but many people get discouraged by the lack of access to the boats and to the coach. The team has but two old shells (boats) which often need repair, said Accibal.

The UConn Crew team has faired well against all types of competition and hopes to put in a bid for varsity athletic status in the near future, according to John Leonard, the president of the crew team. The men's and women's teams are both strong, said Leonard.

"We have two boats that are unstoppable and two others that have the potential to reach that level if we only had the equipment to accommodate them," said Leonard. "If we were a varsity sport, we would have enough money to get the right equipment and have enough time to devote to the entire team."

The Associate Athletic Director, Phil Barry, said that when a team makes a bid for varsity status, they must show the university several characteristics.

The prospective team must show sustained leadership and interest in the program, the apparent committment of outside coaching, and a normal and acceptable scheduling philosophy.

The Crew team would have to show that it has a lake to practice and race in, that the sport is popular in the area and that there is prospective talent in the area.

The university would oversee the program for a sufficient amount of time and would decide whether it would be feasible and beneficial to the university to declare this program an intercollegiate sport, he said.

The crew team at the University of Connecticut was formed in the Fall of 1985, according to Craig Slavtcheff, a member of the crew team.

The constitution was written and in the spring of 1986, when the first shell was purchased. It was a used shell that was funded by the USG (Undergraduate Student Government) and cost about two thousand dollars. There was no coach at this time.

A few interested members taught the others about the sport. That same semester, a second shell was purchased and the team had its first race. The following semester Coach Donnelly, former crew coach at Fordham University in New York, volunteered to help the team out.

Hammer softens hard-guy image

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Tough private eye Mike Hammer used to eat hoods for breakfast, but he has mellowed now that CBS has moved his show to an earlier hour.

"It's a different show now," said executive producer Jay Bernstein. "Originally it was a 10 o'clock show, then it was moved to 9 and now it's on at 8. You might say it's 'The Equalizer' with humor."

"It used to be that someone would come to Hammer for help. Five minutes later that person would be dead, and Hammer was out solving the murder. But the new line is that Hammer cares."

Hammer cares? In the books by Mickey Spillane, Mike Hammer punched and blasted his way to a solution. Even in the hardboiled world of detective fiction, Hammer was something of a Neanderthal. His idea of crime prevention was a bullet in the gut.

"The New Mike Hammer," which originally was "Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer," has gone through many gyrations since it first joined CBS as a weekly series in January 1984. CBS frequently moved the show, from night to night and from time period to time period. This season alone CBS has moved the show twice, from Saturday to Wednesday and back to Saturday.

For another thing, its star, Stacy Keach, was sentenced to prison in England in December 1984 for smuggling 1 1/4 ounces of cocaine. He was released in June 1985 with time off for good behavior, but the show in the meantime had left the air.

Bernstein worked doggedly to get the show back on. While Keach was in prison, he visited 15 cities in 37 days to stir enough interest to prompt CBS to bring the show back.

"Mike Hammer" is currently seen at 8 p.m. EST Wednesday, but on April 11, it will move to Saturday at the same time.

Bernstein has loaded "Mike Hammer" with big names to help attract an audience. Among them have been Monkees drummer Mickey Dolenz, Gloria Loring of "Days of Our Lives," Edward Albert, Caryn Richman of "Gidget," Christopher Hewitt of "Mr. Belvedere," Peter Scholari of "Newhart," and Claude Akins.

In one show, Larry Wilcox played an old friend training for a heavyweight boxing match. Genie Francis played his sister, who was worried about her brother's dizzy spells. Louise Mandrell was the fight promoter, and Theodore Wilson was the trainer. Hammer tracked down the bad guy, but with a minimum of mayhem.

Karen Valentine and Barbara Billingsley ("Leave It to Beaver") played nuns on another show. Tony Dow of "Leave It to Beaver" showed up on another episode.

"We're paying more money for guest stars than any other show," said Bernstein.

The bludgeoning bitterness of the old Mike Hammer lives on in Bernstein's second CBS crime series, "Houston Knights." He calls it a buddy show with a difference.

"This isn't 'Starsky and Hutch' or 'Simon and Simon,'" Bernstein said. "They're not pals. The origins of this are more from motion pictures than television. The most recent example was '48 HRS.' Nick Nolte and Eddie Murphy had nothing in common. They respected each other, but they didn't like each other.

"It's like Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy in 'Boom Town.' People compare it to 'Miami Vice,' but it's not like that at all," Bernstein said.

Women's semester offers practical experience

By Rebecca Larkin
Campus Correspondent

There's an interesting yet little-known program called the Women's Semester. It's an undergraduate course sponsored by the Women's Studies Program.

As an HDFR major, I wasn't required to take this course, but as a woman I was interested in it and felt that it would have direct bearing on my future; it did.

The program sent me to the Natchaug Partial Hospitalization Programs as a counselor trainee. Aside from the mechanical aspects of my duties, I gained experience normally only available at the graduate level of study.

I worked with patients first hand, the paranoids, schizophrenics, and borderline cases. I learned therapies used to facilitate their recoveries.

By the end of the semester, I knew I could do my work outside the classroom. It was a wonderful and sometimes scary experience, but it helped me make career decisions.

Throughout the experience I had excellent supervision from my field supervisor, Joyce Duffy.

She was supportive and encouraging during the entire semester. She clearly outlined her expectations of my work and the responsibilities given me were suited to my capabilities. We met often to discuss my strengths, progress, and work-related difficulties. Duffy was not only a good supervisor and role model, she was also a good friend.

In cooperation with Duffy and I, Diane Martell, my field placement supervisor, worked to ensure that I got everything that I needed and wanted from my field placement.

Her personalized attention added a unique component to the weekly seminar that is included with Women's Semester.

We also dealt with some practical aspects of job hunting like interviewing skills and resume writing. As a whole the seminar provides invaluable information to women entering todays work force.

What enables Women's Semester to be such an effective program is how your individual interests are treated. Instead of handing a student a list of placements to choose from, Martell discusses with them their interests and career goals.

If none of the placements on file suit the individuals goals, she will investigate with the student other possibilities until a proper field placement is found.

To qualify for the program, the student must be a junior or senior, work twelve to eighteen hours per week at the field placement and participate in the weekly seminar. The program offers up to 12 credits.

You don't have to major in women's studies to participate. Students from many backgrounds have completed internships through Women's Semester. Women's Semester is not focused on any one narrow field.

The Women's Semester was one of the best experiences I had in my four years of study. It not only gave me a greater knowledge of my field but a greater knowledge of myself.

For more information on the Women's Semester Internship program contact Diane Martell, the Women's Semester Coordinator, at 486-5896 or 486-3970 or stop by the Women's Studies office.

Jewels bring millions for AIDS research

GENEVA (AP)—The late Duchess of Windsor's most prized jewels fetched the equivalent of $28 million on the opening night of a two-day auction Thursday, more than three times the known record paid for any single collection.

The highest price, 4.3 million francs ($2.9 million) was paid for a 31-carat diamond ring. Tokyo diamond dealer Tsuneo Takagi said he would keep the ring for his own display and would not resell it.

Ninety-five top lots were offered on the first evening of the sale of mementos that recall the celebrated romance between American Wallis Warfield Simpson and King Edward VIII, who gave up the British throne 50 years ago to marry the twice-divorced commoner.

By the Duchess' will, proceeds of the sale will go the the Pasteur Institute in Paris, which has recently been in the forefront of the fight against AIDS. The money is to go toward building at least one laboratory of research on retroviruses, cancer and AIDS, the auctioneer announced before bids began.

A ruby and diamond necklace, a 40th birthday present from the Duke in 1936 one year before they were married, went for 3.55 million francs ($2.4 million) to an anonymous phone bidder.

The highest sum previously paid at an auction for a single set of jewelry was $8.09 million for the collection of Florence Gould, widow of railway magnate Frank Gould, according to Christie's, the auctioneers of that sale.

Dynasty heads meet

LONDON (AP)—When soap opera queen Joan Collins met Queen Mother Elizabeth they found they had "Dynasty" in common.

Miss Collins, wearing sugar-pink satin bows and a bustle, was presented to the mother of Queen Elizabeth II, dressed in a lemon yellow gown and white fur stole, at a charity showing Monday of the movie "84 Charing Cross Road."

Afterward, the actress who portrays Alexis in the glitzy soap said: "We discussed 'Dynasty' and the queen mother said she loved it."

Miss Collins, accompanied by developer Bill Wiggins, also was introduced to Prince Charles and Princess Diana, but refused to say what they talked about.

Members of the royal family also met two of the stars of the film, Anne Bancroft and Judi Dench, and American author Helene Hanff, who wrote the book upon which the film and an earlier play were based.

The charity showing will raise $144,00 for the Cinema and Television Benevolent Fund which helps needy people who have spent their lives working in film and television.

Best of "LIFE" at Wadsworth

Two hundred photographs originally published in "LIFE" Magazine will be on view at the Wadsworth Atheneum from April 26 through August 2. The photographs document the period of 1946-1955, the years immediately following World War II.

The exhibition, funded by Time, Inc. and by United Technologies Corporation, has traveled to American museums across the country since it opened in 1985. Organized by the International Center of Photography in New York City in honor of their tenth anniversary, the exhibition has been seen in the Disrict of Columbia, Colorado Springs, Nashville, Quebec and Vancouver (Canada), Long Beach (CA), Syracuse (NY), Boston, Detroit, and Des Moines. After the show leaves Hartford, "Life: The Second Decade, 1946-1955" will be on view at the University of Indiana, Wheaton College in Massachusetts, and at the University of Pittsburgh.

Doris C. O'Neil, Director of Vintage Prints, Time Inc., who selected the photographs from the 156,000 in the collection, says: "The difficulty of choosing 200... cannot be exaggerated." Because she has worked with the collection since 1948, she was glad to have the opportunity "to share with a wider audience some of the memorable pictures I first saw during those wonderful years."

Most of the photographs were taken on assignment for Life Magazine. Among the photographers whose work will be on view are: Margaret Bourke-White, Cornell Capa (now the Director of the International Center of Photography), Henri Cartier-Bresson, Alfred Eisenstaedt, Philippe Halsman, Gordon Parks, and George Silk. Examples of photographs that appear in the show are:

Nina Leen's "Four Generations of an Ozark family with Fifth Generation in the Portraits on the Wall" ("LIFE", July 26, 1946)

Leonard McCombe's "Former Servicemen, Living on Unemployment Pay of $20 a week for 52 weeks, Gather in a Long Island, New York Drugstore" ("LIFE", Nov. 25, 1946)

Francis Miller's "Chicago Bar Patrons Watch Seventh Game of the 1952 Yankee-Dodger World Series" ("LIFE", Dec. 15, 1952)

"These pictures ... [are] vibrant, dramatically conjuring up emotions of joy, laughter, sorrow or disbelief ... we have lost heroes and created myths."

Francine Zorn Trachtenberg, Adjunct Curator of Photography at the Atheneum, describes visitors' experiences with this exhibition: "Even with the historical perspective of over thirty years, these pictures do not emerge as benign images. Each is vibrant, dramatically conjuring up emotions of joy, laughter, sorrow or disbelief. Some things seem never to have changed, some things appear terribly 'dated,' and some seemed to have reappeared a second and even a third time. We have grown old with public friends. We have lost heroes and created myths."

The Life show will open with a party on Saturday, April 25 from 9p.m. until midnight. Clothing or memorabilia from the 1940's or '50s is suggested. Entertainment during the evening will include TV shows and commercials from the 1950's, juke-boxes with hits from the era, a dance contest, and Sci-Fi 3-D classics playing in the Avery Theater. Tickets may be ordered by writing to "LIFE", Wadsworth Atheneum, 600 Main St., Harftord, CT

Connecticut students deserve seat on BOG

UConn students have almost no say in their educational process. Sure, we have groups such as ConnPIRG which fight for student rights. But actual representation in Hartford is virtually non-existent.

It is for that reason that a bill before the General Assembly's Education Committee is so important. If passed, the bill would add two students members to the Board of Governors of Higher Education, the most powerful body in higher education. It is the kingpin of policy for colleges and universities in Connecticut.

A similar measure was voted down in 1985. This time around, though, students from around the state, and especially UConn, have been working diligently to get the measure out of committee and before the legislature. Friday is the deadline for committee action.

There is no reason why this bill should not be given the full support of our elected officials. Connecticut prides itself on a strong public school system and the student body is the lifeblood of these institutions.

The only thing holding the bill back is politics. The main opposition comes from legislators who believe putting students on the board would cause resentment among educators who want teaching professionals on the Board.

Students deserve to be on the Board of Governors because no one knows our needs better. It is the least the state could do for its public university students.

No need for females as Boy Scout leaders

Affirmative Action may have gone a bit too far in Milford. Catherine Pollard, 69, has been fighting for 13 years to become the nation's first woman scoutmaster of a Boy Scout troop. Wednesday, she asked the state Supreme Court to grant her wish and overturn a lower court ruling that barred her from the position because of her sex.

Pollard's lawyer argued in court that a male role model is not necessarily needed for young boys. The Boy Scouts' lawyer said the group is a private organization and that boys ages 11 to 14 need male role models.

It appears that Pollard has little to do in her retirement. If she did, she wouldn't be spending her free time disrupting an organization which has been a symbol of male companionship for so long.

The Boy Scouts was developed to give young boys the opportunity to grow through different experiences. It is more than just building fires and pitching tents. Boy Scouts deals with health concerns, public service and community welfare.

This is not to say that women are not suited to inform boys on the aforementioned subjects. But male role models are very important for boys, and male scout leaders play large roles in development.

If Pollard wants to use her time wisely, she should volunteer with the Girl Scouts. This organization works along similar lines as the Boy Scouts and is just as important for young girls.

The reality of turning 40 is made worse by Mom

The phone rang. I pulled the covers up over my head. The phone was still ringing. I buried myself with pillows. The phone would not stop.

Finally I had to answer it.

"Happy..." said a voice on the other end.

I slammed the receiver down.

There were a few minutes of blessed silence. The phone rang again.

This time I let it ring itself out.

But then, before long, the ringing resumed.

I picked up the phone.

"This is your mother," the voice said. "Don't hang up on me."

I said nothing.

"Are you there?" she said.

I remained silent.

"I know you're there," she said. "I just want to wish you a happy birthday."

I threw the phone to the floor and crawled under the blankets again.

I could hear my mother's voice coming out of the telephone down on the carpet. The voice was distant and tinny, but I could tell that she was still there.

I reached down and pulled the phone under the covers with me.

"Aren't you going to your office at all today?" my mother said.

I made a heaving sound.

"You really should go to work," she said.

I said nothing.

"You really aren't handling this very well, are you?" she said.

I rolled over and tried to burrow into the mattress.

"Look," she said, "you should be happy about being 40."

I decided to speak.

"I am not happy," I said.

"You are not treating your 40th birthday as an occasion for celebration," she said.

"It's not my 40th birthday," I said. That was my new plan: denial.

"Bobby," she said, "don't be ridiculous. It's your 40th birthday. Have you opened your presents?"

"No," I said.

And that was true. I figured the longer I delayed opening my few meager presents, the longer I could put off accepting the fact that I was turning 40 years old.

"Open your presents," my mother said.

I was silent.

"I suppose I know how you feel," my mother said. "Your father's birthday was last week, and he wasn't very happy about turning 72 either."

"I have to go now," I said.

"Go to work," my mother said.

"Goodbye," I said.

I decided that if I stayed under the covers long enough, the day would come to a merciful end. But almost immediately, the phone rang again.

It was a column-writing colleague of mine who works in another city. He has never called me on my birthday before. But today he was calling.

"Happy birthday!" he said in a cheery voice. The rat.

"How do you know it's my birthday?" I said.

"How could I forget your 40th birthday?" he said.

He is 39. He has a year to gloat.

"I have to go now," I said.

"What are you doing to celebrate?" he said. "Are you going out to dinner?"

"Goodbye," I said, and hung up.

My brother called next.

"What's wrong?" he said as soon as he heard my voice.

"Nothing," I said. "I have to get off."

"You sound terrible," he said.

"I'm fine," I said.

"There's nothing wrong with being 40," he said.

Easy for him to say. He is 33.

"You know, you did this before," he said.

"I did not," I said.

"Yes, you did," he said. "You did it when you turned 30."

"I don't recall," I said.

"I do," he said. "You wrote a column saying that you were not really 30. You said you were twenty-ten."

"Goodbye," I said.

I flipped over so that I was on my back again. I stared at the ceiling.

I picked up the front section of the newspaper from the floor and started to read it. The type seemed sort of fuzzy. I think my eyes are getting bad.

Am I a "Mr." now?

The phone rang.

It was my sister.

"Timmy just called me," she said. Timmy is my brother.

"Timmy said you won't get out of bed," my sister said.

I said nothing.

"You have to get out of bed sometime," my sister said.

Oh yeah?

Date rape is seen as a social enigma

Editor's note: This is the second of a three-part series on women and violence.

Compare the following testimonies of the litigants involved in a case of a man accused by a woman of date rape:

Man: Maybe she shouldn't have come to my room in the first place.

Woman: I went to his room because he was personable and unassuming.

Man: I'd be a wimp if I didn't take charge of the situation.

Woman: He was too strong; I couldn't fight him.

Man: Women think it's sexy when they are overpowered.

Woman: The only thing I was guilty of is trusting him.

This scenario was portrayed in a recent episode of the TV series "L.A. Law." Too often, however, the portrayal of sex forced upon a woman occurs in everyday reality, particularly on college campuses. Call it date rape, acquaintance rape, social rape, or even friendly assault; for the victims, rape by any other name or method is still rape.

Some psychologists believe that social conditioning is a leading factor in the circumstances surrounding date rape. Some men and women assume the roles of sexuality they see depicted in media stereotypes, including men who are supposed to be aggressive and physical with submissive and emotional women. During a typical soap opera, a man "takes" a woman in his grasp, she offers only slight resistance, he courageously slaps her a couple of times, and they both end up fat, dumb, and happy on the kitchen table.

Still, the assailant is often no pawn of social attitudes. He understands that her "no" means just that, but he clearly recognizes his advantageous position with regards to her will. A study at UCLA revealed that fifty percent of the male students could foresee situations where they would force sex upon a woman if impunity guided them.

Prosecuting incidents of date rape is difficult because the credibility of the victim is always considered suspect to some degree (never mind the credibility of the accused). How many drinks did she have? Why did she go to his place? Why didn't she scream? The nature of these questions is usually intended to ruin her testimony regardless of her answers. "After all, she was drunk and in my bedroom. What did she expect me to do? Knit?"

What she probably did not expect was a presumed and involuntary waiver of her right of consent. The victim is generally aware that society will frown upon her claim to inviolable security under delicate circumstances. As such, the majority of date-rape victims refuse to subject themselves to further humiliation under the auspices of justice. "It's a man's world, and they twist the laws for their own satisfaction, particularly when it comes to a free groan at the expense of a helpless woman."

Not all of the circumstances behind the assault stem from party atmospheres. As many as thirty percent of all victims were acquainted with their rapist before the act, whether he was a neighbor, friend, or so-and-so's brother from Kalamazoo. The assailant manipulates her trust during a moment of his convenience, thereby "gaining access" to her. As a double blow, the woman sometimes blames herself for leading him on. She assumes that she provided him with an excuse to disregard her will. Once he is in motion, she is resigned to let him have his way. "After all, a man doesn't really rape his date now, does he?"

Many of the victims are young and uncomfortable women new to a different environment. Lacking self-esteem, they feel powerless to communicate what little assertion they do have to a persistent date. Some feel intimidated by the disparity is physical capabilities of men and women. Still others are even too embarrassed to tell him to pack sand with his plans.

It is presumptuous and defeatist for a woman to suspect every man she meets as a potential attacker. Equally unjust is the thought of a woman unable to drink freely at a friendly gathering without having to worry about her personal solvency.

Many rape prevention centers have instituted programs to address the problems of social conditioning and the influence of stereotypes on expectations. Men are reminded that the legal definition of "no" is still "no," and that "against her will is against the law." Women are advised that a litte caution never ruined a good party. In fact, caution may be the only guide to prevent a woman from being reduced to a victim who fears, not only strangers and lunatics, but friends and dates as well.

Spring Weekend spelled out

•In recent years, Spring Weekend has undergone changes, and this year is no exception. We feel, however, that all changes have been made to benefit members of the University of Connecticut student body. In reality, Spring Weekend is not what it used to be at all. It is better.

This year's weekend, Unityfest '87, has involved more participation and more enthusiasm from student groups than ever before. This year, Area Councils, The Black Students Association, USG and SUBOG — four of the largest student organizations on campus — have been involved from the beginning in planning these campus-wide events.

In the past, student groups have been encouraged to work toward a common goal. For the first time in the history of the campus, this has been accomplished. We feel that the students should celebrate this and what better forum than during Unityfest '87. The Spring Weekend Committee is bringing to UConn three quality concert acts — more than any other school in New England, the National Campus Entertainer of the Year, Tim Settimi, the Blushing Brides, one of the best tribute bands in the country, and a tremendous variety of programs including dances, picnics, singing groups and movies. There are, in reality, more events taking place during Unityfest '87 than ever before.

By integrating the input of many organizations, we are providing a diverse set of events that are sure to appeal to most students.

We urge you to support and enjoy the programs that are being provided for you as students. Look at Unityfest '87 not as a tradition lost, but rather as a new tradition that has begun.

Push for Nuclear Free Zone is UConn's newest fad

· On April 15, the UConn Undergraduate Student Government will be asked to consider and pass a resolution to be presented to the Board of Trustees to establish the following: one, declare the university a Nuclear Free Zone, prohibiting the testing, deployment, development, or any research on nuclear weapons within the borders of the university; two, an end to the investment of university funds in companies involved in nuclear weapons production; and, three, the establishment of a Center for Peace Studies, offering courses to develop an awareness of peaceful efforts of change.

A student group has sprung up on campus supporting this resolution by gathering signatures on petitions and attempting to develop awareness of the issues at stake among the student body.

To declare this state's university against nuclear weaponry, in a state so dependent on military spending, is a powerful symbolic act, testifying to our collective realization and abhorrence of the waste and danger inherent in the ongoing nuclear arms race and the belief it must stop. It is the future of our world at stake here. This act might be, in the larger scheme of things, only a ripple, but, enough ripples together can create waves.

Disinvestment is the thorniest issue of this proposal. Some students have objected to it because they are afraid of losing future jobs and the support for the university from major defense companies. I agree that some companies might be alienated by our disinvesment and cease their support of this university. The choice, however, is clear. Because nuclear weapons have long past the point where they are weapons of defense, neither we nor the Soviet Union can use them without destroying each other. The continuing development and deployment of nuclear weapons is a useless exercise in overkill. To work in these industries is not to work for the defense of this nation but to contribute to the possible annihilation of it and all it stands for. I sympathize with those who would lose jobs, but would point out that such jobs only increase the twenty-five thousand weapons of death we have today and ask that you put your skills to better uses than to create more.

The final part of the proposal, to establish a Center for Peace Studies would offer an opportunity for students to study and learn from the struggle for peace and justice in our world. It is a part of the univerisity's curriculum that has been missing and should be provided.

Let all of the students who believe in this proposal show the Undergraduate Student Government, the State of Connecticut, and the world, that we care about our future, a future threatened by nuclear distruction. Let us gather at 6:00 p.m., April 15 in the Student Union and show the members of USG that this proposal is important, that it will make people take notice, and it must pass.

We deserve break for state holidays

•Having been members of the student population for three years, it has become increasingly difficult to ignore flaws in university policy. One particular flaw can be found in the university calendar. Here at UConn we receive no time off for state holidays!

When our friends from other colleges are enjoying the extended weekends that Columbus Day or Washington's Birthday provide, we are either in class or in the library. To compound this issue, UConn is the only state university that does not acknowledge any of the state holidays. If Southern or Eastern can work their calendar around these certain days then why can't UConn?

UConn is a prominent educational institution. Why should students and faculty be denied a benefit that universities of lesser status receive? Administrators might argue that the structure of the current calendar allows for the conservation of energy. There are other alternatives, though. For instance, days could be deleted from our overlong Christmas break. Instead, we could acknowledge some of the state holidays that exist during the course of a semester. This would alleviate the monotony of having classes five days a week.

It is the responsibility of the university senate to initiate any policy changes. While our proposal is one that can't transpire immediately, nevertheless, it is one that deserves considerable attention. We encourage the university senate to look into the possibilities of altering the present calendar. Days off during the course of a semester would be a benefit to all.

Famous pianist to perform here

Jazz piano star Marian McPartland will perform in concert at von der Mehden Hall here on April 16 at 8:15 p.m.

The concert will feature McPartland performing with the UConn Jazz Ensemble and in a two-piano set with Ellen Rowe, assistant professor of music at UConn. Rowe, a composer, conductor and pianist, has written arrangements and transcriptions for McPartland. McPartland has performed Rowe's arrangements with orchestras throughout the United States and Europe, including the London Symphony Orchestra.

This concert marks the first time McPartland and Rowe will have performed together. They will play selections of music by Gershwin, Kern, and Porter, among other favorites. The UConn Jazz Ensemble will join McPartland in performing a selection of her compositions, including "A Delicate Balance" and "Ambiance," Dick Lieb's "Afterglow," and Phil Wilson's "Piano Fortress," written for McPartland.

McPartland has won numerous awards as a jazz educator and for her nationally syndicated radio show, Marian McPartland's Piano Jazz. She is known and respected by critics and musicians the world over for her flawless timing and encyclopedic knowledge of piano jazz music.

Tickets are available in advance for a reduced rate of $7.50 for the general public and $4 for students. Checks, made out to The University of Connecticut may be mailed to UConn, School of Fine Arts, Box U-128, 875 Coventry Road, Storrs, CT 06268. Tickets at the door are $10 general, $6 students.

Jazz show at Eastern

The Eastern Connecticut State University Jazz Orchestra will perform a free concert on Thursday, April 9, 1987 at 7:00 p.m. in the MultiPurpose Room of The Student Center on Eastern's North Campus in Willimantic. The University Community and general public are invited to attend.

Write comedy for TV

College students seeking careers in Hollywood inevitably ask: "How do I get my foot in the door?"

Comedian/actor Jimmie Walker, who sprang to national prominence when he portrayed the wisecracking J.J. on "Good Times," wants to give a break to college writers who think they know how to write jokes for stand-up comedy.

Walker, who will soon be seen in the feature film release "My African Adventure," and will also star in his own TV series "Bustin' Loose" this fall, began his career writing jokes for other comics. Now, he is soliciting material from student joke-writers.

If Walker uses the material, he will pay the writers. A less tangible, but probably more consequential, reward will be that the writers will have established comedy-writing credits with a comedy/TV/film personality—which can only be of benefit to the students in their efforts to get started in Hollywood.

Any student wishing to submit material to Walker should send it to his Hollywood office which is located at 9000 Sunset Blvd., Suite 400, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Students should also make sure to enclose their name, address and phone number, so that Walker can locate them in the event that he is interested in their material.

CALL FOR NOMINATIONS

ANNA VICTORIA LITTLE MEMORIAL AWARDS

Vicki Little was a student at The University of Connecticut at the time of her death in May, 1985. She was a positive role model not only for Black students but for all students. Her determintation, desire and concern extended well beyond the classroom. A serious student, outstanding athlete, reliable employee and a big sister, would all describe Vicki.

Vicki meant so much to us and because of that the Afro-American Cultural Center of the Division of Student Affairs and Services created the AnnaVictoria Little Memorial Awards to honor Vicki's memory. These awards are given to those students and one university employee who has, during the course of the academic school year, exhibited outstanding efforts and/or support of the goals of the Afro-American Cultural Center in its continuous search to improve the quality of life of the Black student at The University of Connecticut/Storrs, and to increase the level of racial awareness among the entire community.

CATEGORIES

A. Leadership - Awarded to that individual student who has exhibited continuous and outstanding service through co-curricular activities to improve upon the general welfare of the Black student at the university.
B. Athletics - Awarded to that individual student athlete who has excelled in a varsity sport while supporting the goals of the Afro-American Cultural Center.
C. Service - Awarded to The University of Connecticut employee who has done an exceptional job in improving race awareness and relations on campus.

QUALIFICATIONS

A. Students - Must be currently enrolled full-time at the university and be in good academic standing and not on any type of probation.
B. University Employee - Must be currently employed by The University of Connecticut/or have been employed within the current academic year.

Sports analyst wants decrease in violence

By Susan Okula
Associated Press Writer

NEW HAVEN (AP)—A film showing incident after incident of professional athletes throwing punches at each other drew occasional chuckles from a college audience Wednesday, but an expert on sports violence said the issue was no laughing matter.

"Someone has to draw the line between normal and excessive violence" in sports, said attorney Richard Horrow, who chaired the American Bar Association Task Force on Sports Violence. Horrow, who deals with sports matters in his Miami law practice, was speaking at Southern Connecticut State University.

Horrow's definition of excessive violence is when the act is not reasonably related to the competitive aspect of the sport.

For example, checking in hockey or blocking in football may result in injury but are also a normal part of the game, Horrow said.

However, "you don't score goals by going into the stands and taking a spectator's shoe and whamming him over the head 12 times," he said.

Horrow has been the author of two unsuccessful federal bills that would have placed a check on violence in professional sports. No legislation is currently pending before Congress on the issue, he said.

But Horrow says he continues to travel around the country to talk about violence in sports in an effort to get people to think about it.

Public discussion has done some good, he said, pointing out that the NFL, NBA, NHL and professional baseball have put some new regulations into effect concerning excessive violence by players.

Horrow said the players themselves can't do much about checking violence in games, because they perceive that's what the owners and fans want.

Players know they can be replaced, he said. "There's a guy on the farm waiting to take his place," he said.

Horrow recalled the case of Los Angeles Kings hockey player Paul Mulvey, who refused coach Don Perry's orders to join a fight that broke out in a Jan. 24, 1982, game. Several days later, Perry sent Mulvey to the Kings' farm team, the New Haven Nighthawks.

Although Perry was temporarily suspended and fined, Horrow said the message to players was that "if your coach tells you to fight, and you don't fight, you're gone."

Horrow also mentioned the case of Bruins player Dave Forbes, who was tried for assaulting the North Stars' Henri Boucha on the ice on Jan. 4, 1975. Horrow said testimony showed that Forbes went after Boucha's eye with a hockey stick.

A criminal case resulted in hung jury, with jurors later saying that they had trouble applying criminal law, which was written with street crime in mind, to a hockey game, Horrow said. Forbes was suspended for 10 days by the NHL, he said. Boucha, who claimed he suffered from double vision, settled a civil case out of court for an undisclosed amount against the Bruins, Forbes and the NHL in 1980.

Horrow also mentioned a soccer riot in July 1980 in Bangladesh that involved fans and resulted in 230 people being killed and 1,300 injured, football injuries and a Little League mother shooting and killing another mother in the bleachers in Oklahoma in 1980 after one mother insulted the other's child.

Dodgers' VP Campanis resigns after racial remarks

By Michael A. Lutz
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP)—Al Campanis, vice president of player personnel for the Los Angeles Dodgers, resigned Wednesday at the request of the team following his statement that blacks may not be qualified for high-level jobs in baseball.

Upon arrival Wednesday afternoon at Los Angeles International Airport from Houston, where the Dodgers opened the season against the Astros, Campanis called his resignation "something that I think that had to be done for the good of the club and for all concerned. That's all I've got to say."

"Comments given by Al Campanis are so far removed from what the organization believes that it is impossible for Al to continue his responsibilities," Dodgers President Peter O'Malley said after breaking the news to the 70-year-old Campanis.

Campanis had been in charge of player personnel since 1968 and a member of the Dodgers' organization since 1943 in capacities ranging from player to vice president. Fred Claire, the Dodgers' executive vice president, will assume the player personnel duties.

Campanis was asked Monday night on ABC's "Nightline" about the paucity of blacks in baseball front offices and as managers.

"I don't believe it's prejudice," Campanis said. "I truly believe that they may not have some of the necessities to be, let's say, a field manager, or perhaps a general manager...

"I don't say all of them, but how many quarterbacks do you have? How many pitchers do you have that are black? So, it just might be why are black men, or black people, not good swimmers? Because they don't have the buoyancy?"

The statement drew an angry reaction from blacks, including some current members of the Dodgers and from Hank Aaron, baseball's career home run leader and now the vice-president for player development of the Atlanta Braves. Aaron said it showed that baseball was still prejudiced against blacks in front-office positions.

Campanis apologized Tuesday for the remarks, calling the incident "the saddest of my career." But O'Malley said he thought about the situation all night and decided to ask for the resignation Wednesday, calling it "the only proper and appropriate thing to do."

Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda broke into tears as he talked to reporters at the Houston Astrodome.

"This is a sad day for baseball," Lasorda said. "Al is like my brother and father combined. He made a mistake and it cost him, but I guess Peter felt like he had to make this decision."

Raymond Johnson Jr., president of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called Campanis' forced resignation "appropriate."

The Big East weekend series are doubleheaders on Saturday and a single game Sunday. Last week the doubleheader was rained out Saturday, played Sunday, but the single game was rained out Monday.

This weekend, the Huskies travel to Boston College for three games.

"What gets you into the playoffs is what you do on the weekends," Baylock said. "Our goal is to take two out of three [each series]."

HUSKY NOTES: Fairfield coach John Slosar was a former UConn star who played for the Huskies in the 1972 College World Series. "He was an outstanding player," Baylock said.

NBA checking whether Suns are up in clouds

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)—The Phoenix Suns reportedly are the target of a drug investigation by the National Basketball Association, and one of the team's owners said Wednesday the club has been told by the league commissioner "to say nothing" about the matter.

The Arizona Republic and The Phoenix Gazette each reported Wednesday that there was growing evidence of an NBA drug probe involving the Suns.

Team, league and law-enforcement officials either declined comment Wednesday or said they knew nothing of such a probe.

The Republic said that during the past month the NBA had requested a videotape of a Suns' game and that investigators have interviewed members of the team's organization.

"We have been told by NBA Commissioner David Stern to say nothing under penalty of execution," Richard Bloch, a Suns' owner, said from his office in Santa Fe, N.M. "But in any case, I really don't know very much about the matter at this point."

Jerry Colangelo, the team's general manager, also declined to comment.

"When you are told you can't say a word, you can't say a word," Colangelo said Wednesday in a telephone interview from Hawaii.

"There is absolutely nothing I can do at this point but wait."

Within the NBA, such an investigation would be the responsibility of Horace Balmer, director of security.

"I don't want to make any comment on the matter at this time, and don't know when I will be able to comment," Balmer said Wednesday.

Reports of a drug probe involving the Suns surfaced last weekent in a column by Boston Globe sportswriter Will McDonough. He told The Gazette Wednesday that two sources had confirmed his information, but declined to name them.

Federal, state and local law-enforcement officials said they could not shed any light on the reported investigation.

Bill Ruzzamenti, spokesman for the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency in Phoenix, denied a published report that his agency had turned over information to the NBA that implicated some members of the Suns.

"I've checked with low-enforcement entity in this office and we have nothing like that going on," Ruzzamenti said Wednesday. "I don't know where they got that information. It just isn't accurate."

Sgt. Brad Thiss, a Phoenix police spokesman, refused to say whether police are looking into drug use by the Suns. "Our policy is that unless or until someone is indicted or arrested, we can't comment," he said.

And Sgt. Allan Schmidt of the Arizona Department of Public Safety said DPS investigators were not involved.

"They are not doing it, and they were not aware of anyone else doing anything," he said. "It was news to them."

Charles Grantham, vice president of the NBA Players Association, said his office is "checking into it," but had not heard of the reported drug investigation until Wednesday.

John MacLeod, former Suns coach, said no one talked to him concerning the alleged investigation and he was unaware a tape of any game had been requested. MacLeod was fired Feb.26.

Angels sport new look

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP)—Reggie Jackson isn't around anymore. Neither are Bobby Grich and, for the time being Bob Boone.

There are a lot of new faces, though, on the California Angels, and new heroes.

The defending American League West champions, sporting a new look with two rookies and a new veteran catcher in their lineup, won their 1987 season-opener 7-1 Tuesday over the Seattle Mariners.

One of the newcomers played a pivotal role in the victory.

Mark McLemore, the 22-year-old second baseman who entered the season with five major league at-bats, put the Angels ahead to stay with a sixth-inning run-scoring single, his first big-league hit.

He is replacing Grich, who retired last year.

The rookie's contribution did not surprise Manager Gene Mauch.

"He played like he's been playing since I've known him," Mauch said. "I'm just tickled to death, I'm happy about the whole thing."

After the game, McLemore admitted to having some butterflies.

"Iwas nervous," he said. "I didn't dream about the game going in. I didn't think about anything except going out and trying to relax. I got relaxed after that first pitch. When I stepped on the field, when they announced my name, then I really knew I belonged."

McLemore and shortstop Dick Schofield are excited about the possibility of being the Angels' double-play combination for the next decade or more.

"I'd love to," McLemore said.

Brewers top Sox

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Billy Jo Robidoux frove in the go-ahead run with a seventh-inning single Wednesday night as the Milwaukee Brewers rallied for a 3-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Robidoux's second RBI of the game followed singles by Glenn Braggs and Greg Brock off Red Sox releiver Wes Gardner, who lost his first decision this season.

Milwaukee's Chuck Crim, making his major league debut, got the victory in relief of starter Bill Wegman as the Brewers beat the Red Sox for the second straight time in the opening series. Crim held the Red Sox hitless in his two innings, the sixth and seventh.

Huskies put Yale away early

Four pitchers combine to blank Elis on six hits

By Joe Erwin
Daily Campus Staff

NEW HAVEN — The baseball team scored four runs in the first inning and four UConn pitchers made sure it would be more than the Huskies would need Wednesday as UConn defeated Yale 6-0.

Dave Fradkin (two innings), Stew Strong (four), Jim Allen (two) and Charles Nagy (one) combined to hold the Elis to six hits as the Huskies raised their record to 9-10. Yale falls to 16-5.

Last Wednesday, the Huskies defeated Yale 16-2 in Storrs, which gave the Elis a revenge motive.

"I was a little concerned going into today's game," UConn coach Andy Baylock said. "With the record they have and the pounding they took last week we felt they were going to be waiting in the wings for us — and they were, they had their best pitcher going."

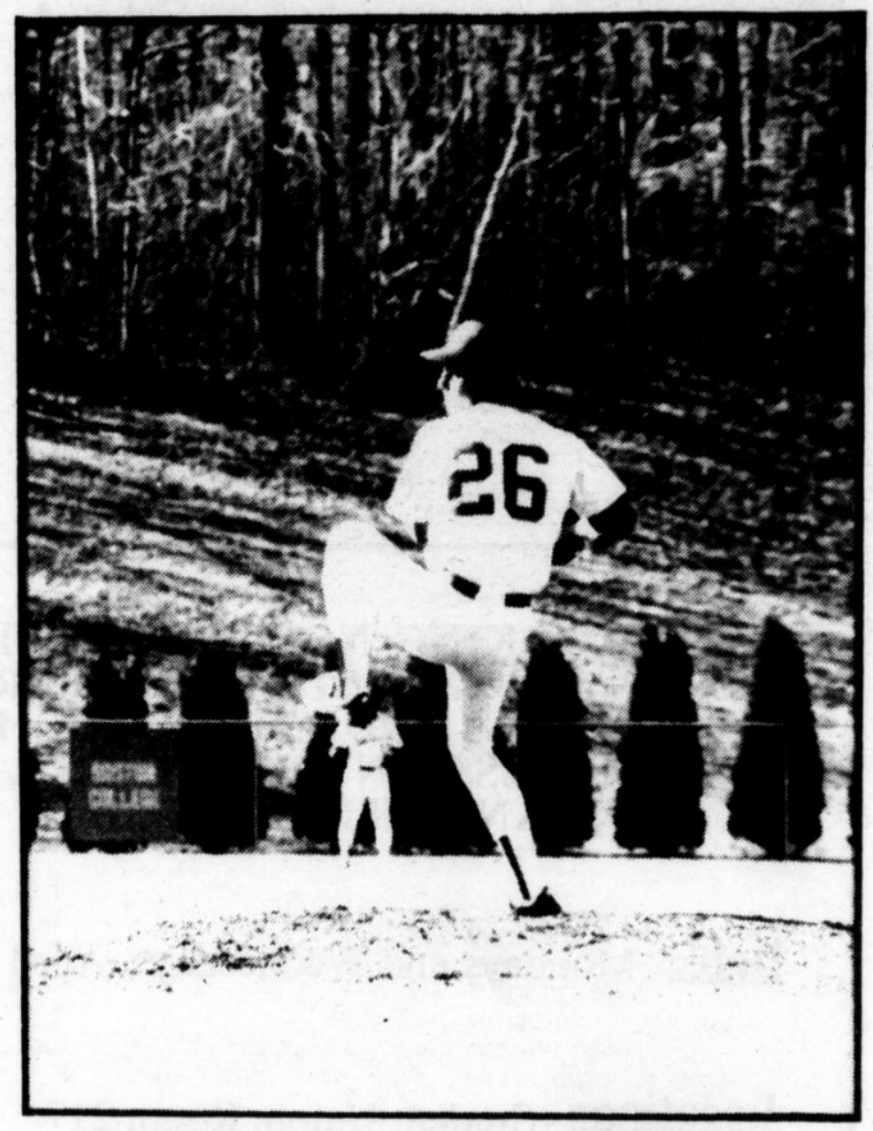
Baylock was surprised that the Huskies were able to come out of the gate so strong against Bob Shoop, 3-2, whom Baylock called "a lefthander with a very good curve ball."

But UConn came out hitting. Delroy Parkinson led off the game with a single and then, Baylock said, "Our running game helped us tremendously."

Parkinson took off for second and beat the throw on a ground ball back to the mound, leaving runners at first and second.

Dave Lanese and Andy Walker followed with run-scoring singles, and Jon Gery also added a single. Nagy, who was the designated hitter in place of Scott Reimold, who's out with flu, struck out, but Brian Specyalski came through with a two-run single.

The Huskies added a run in the second inning on a Parkinson double and a single by Peter Zippel.



Jim Jones, seen in a game last week against Yale, is likely to be the starting pitcher today as the baseball team hosts Fairfield (Stephanie Robb photo).

UConn closed out the scoring in the third on a home run by Marc Ericson, his third homer of the season.

From that point on it was up to the pitchers to keep the momentum, which they did, as Fradkin evened his record at 2-2.

"Anytime you get a lot of runs early you want to hold the momentum," Baylock said. "If you get it and lose it it's tough to get it back."

Baylock has used a lot of pitchers this season because "You've got to do it when you've got new people. Everybody gets a chance to concentrate [when pitching in a game]."

Baylock plans to use as many as six pitchers today, when the Huskies host Fairfield at 3 p.m., with Jim Jones as the "possible probable starter."

UConn pounded the Stags 20-3 in Fairfield last Thursday, and the Stags may also want revenge.

"That's the thing about baseball," Baylock said. "If their pitcher throws a good game he can keep them in it."

The Huskies would like to beat Fairfield because the state teams "have a little league going here," but Baylock said the crucial games are the Big East games, played on weekends.

UConn dropped to 2-3 in the Big East with a pair of losses Sunday at St. John's which Baylock calls "our toughest competition, year in and year out."

Whalers rally for win

By Chris Dahl
Associated Press Writer

HARTFORD (AP) — Paul MacDermid tipped in a shot by Randy Ladoceur at 2:20 of overtime Wednesday night as the Hartford Whalers came back from a two-goal deficit to beat the Quebec Nordiques 3-2 in a fight-marred opening game of the NHL Adams Division playoff series.

McDermid's deflection, the Whalers' first shot of the overtime, went between the legs of Quebec goalie Mario Gosselin.

The Nordiques went into a dance of celebration when John D'Grodnick drilled a high shot past Whalers goalie Mike Liut as time ran out in regulation. But officials ruled the shot was after the buzzer, sending the game into overtime.

The Whalers had tied the game on low shot from the slot by Dean Evason at 8:48 of the third period.

Just more than a minute later, a brawl brcke out that resulted in penalties to every player on the ice except the goalies.

The Whalers lost all-star defenseman Ulf Samuelsson, the third man in on a fight between Randy Moller and Save Tipppett, for the remainder of the game, and referee Ron Hoggarth invoked a rarely used rule, fining both teams $1,000 for failing to disperse.

Trying to desperately to keep control of the game, Hoggarth assessed 36 penalties, for 106 minutes, in the opening period, including 28 penalties in the first 5:18.

Other NHL playoff results

Yankees top Tigers, 6-5

DETROIT (AP)—Willie Randolph's RBI single capped a two-run New York ninth inning as the Yankees rallied from a 5-0 deficit to defeat the Detroit Tigers 6-5 Wednesday.

With the Yankees trailing 5-4, pinch hitter Ron Kittle worked reliever Willie Hernandez for a two-out walk in the ninth. Claudell Washington, running for Kittle, went to second on a bunt single by Wayne Tolleson and then to third when third baseman Darnell Coles threw Tolleson's ball wild at first for an error.

Washington scored on a wild pitch by Hernandez and Randolph singled Tolleson across with the winning run.

Dave Righetti worked the ninth inning in relief of winner Charles Hudson, who retired all 13 batters he faced after taking over for Tommy John. Righetti got the save.

Adelphi, darkness stop softball

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. — The UConn softball team lost one and tied one Wednesday at Adelphi University.

The meeting was the first of the year between the top teams in the Northeast. UConn is currently ranked No. 1 in the Div. I Northeast region poll and is tied for 20th in the nation, while Adelphi is No. 2 in the Northeast.

In the first game senior Husky righthander Denise Hannon allowed only one run, but took the loss as UConn was only able to get two hits against Panther lefthander Kris Peterson.

In the second game UConn scored its only run in the first innning when hot-hitting freshman Vicki Bartolucci led off the game with a triple and scored on Dawn Muzoleski's fielder's choice.

Adeplhi manufactured a run in the fourth with a single, a sacrifice, a fielder's choice, and a sacrifice fly.

With the game tied at 1-1, freshman Sue Rybczyk came in to relieve Sharon Arnold, and shut out the Panthers for nine innings until the 13th when the game was called because of darkness.

UConn returns to action Friday when they play in the Boston College Invitational Tournament. The Huskies are the No. 1 seed and will play their first game of the double elimination tournament at 1:00 p.m. against the winner of the game between No. 3 seed Boston College and No. 4 seed St. John's.
